Course Overview and Approach

“Environmental governance,” according to geographers Bridge and Perrault (2009: 486) refers to the “institutional re/alignments of state, capital, and civil society actors in relation to the management of environments and resources, and the implications of these configurations for social and environmental outcomes”. The purpose of this course is to develop an advanced understanding of the contemporary dynamics of environmental governance and management, focusing on the social, political and economic contexts in which governance takes place, and the shifting configurations of state and non-state actors and interests that shape it.

This course promotes critical and theoretically informed geographical engagements with contemporary practices and processes of environmental management and governance; an engagement which considers the logics and practices of environmental governance alongside those of state power, capitalist political-economy, settler colonialism, and modern liberal rule. In the first part of this course we will analyze several key theoretical concepts and debates from within geography, as they relate to environmental governance, including nature, neoliberalism, the state and settler-colonialism. For the remainder of the course, we will build on these concepts by examining contemporary topics and concerns in environmental management and governance.

This is a discussion-based seminar; you will be expected to read extensively, to take the time to think critically about what you are reading, to grapple with new and sometimes challenging ideas and concepts, and to participate actively and regularly during both instructor-led and student-led sessions. My role is to facilitate the learning process, but equally important is self-directed learning and peer-to-peer learning. If we approach the class as a cooperative undertaking, we will all come away with a collective and individual appreciation for the contested and shifting terrain of contemporary environmental governance.

A note re Fall 2021 – we are all still continuing to work through a prolonged global pandemic. I will aim to be as flexible, accommodating, and compassionate as possible as we figure out how to learn together in the current context. Please reach out to me anytime with concerns or questions.
Course Objectives

By the end of this term, you will:

- Be able to apply and evaluate the introduced concepts, approaches and theories;
- Be able to critically analyze specific approaches to environmental governance;
- Have strengthened your ability to identify and synthesize scholarly literature relevant to environmental governance;
- Have strengthened your ability to effectively communicate an argument, in both oral and written format; and
- Have strengthened your ability to both offer and respond to constructive, scholarly feedback.
